Quick answer: Diptyque describes Baies through blackcurrant and rose, while Figuier evokes fig fruit alongside leafy and woody aspects of the tree. Choose the direction that interests you; neither description establishes which candle will smell stronger or suit everyone better.

Baies and Figuier both reference fruit, but grouping them together as simply “fruity candles” misses the most useful distinction. One invites a comparison between berries and flowers; the other encourages you to think about fruit within a tree-like setting.

Independent research based on official public information checked October 10, 2026. This is a buying guide, not a hands-on review. OLFAY is not affiliated with the brands discussed.

Baies vs Figuier: The Main Difference

The official Baies product description centers on blackcurrant with rose and green accents. The official Figuier description includes the fruit together with bark, sap and leaves. These are summaries of the brand’s descriptions, not our personal tasting-style notes or an ingredient analysis.

When to Put Baies on Your Shortlist

Consider researching the Diptyque Baies candle if you already enjoy the idea of a fruit-and-flower composition. Think about which part of that pairing attracts you. If your interest is mainly in berries, ask yourself whether a rose component is also welcome.

For a gift, a recipient's existing preferences are more informative than assumptions about what most people like. A familiar name does not guarantee a good fit. If you have no information about their taste, check whether there is a practical way for them to choose their preferred fragrance.

When to Put Figuier on Your Shortlist

Consider researching the Diptyque Figuier candle if a green, woody treatment of fruit appeals to you. A fig reference can mean different things in different products, so avoid assuming that every fig candle is a direct substitute.

Write down whether you are seeking a fresh outdoor association, a fruit emphasis or a woody backdrop. Those distinctions help when comparing descriptions or speaking with a fragrance adviser. They also prevent an appealing product name from doing all the decision-making.

Which Is Sweeter, Stronger or Longer Lasting?

This public-information comparison cannot answer those questions reliably. A list of notes is not a standardized scale of sweetness or fragrance intensity. We have not burned either candle under controlled conditions.

If performance is your main priority, keep the size and conditions comparable and obtain product-specific advice. Do not compare a small candle in one fragrance with a much larger format in the other and attribute every difference to the scent.

How to Compare the Two Before Purchasing

1. Choose comparable formats. Record the exact product name, weight and vessel rather than comparing collection names.
2. Check the current market. Availability and pricing should be verified for the country where you will buy.
3. Identify the desired character. Decide between a fruit-floral idea and a green-wood idea before debating presentation.
4. Separate evidence from preference. Official notes describe intent; your reaction determines enjoyment.
5. Read care instructions. Use the directions supplied with the selected product.

Turning the Comparison into Your Own Fragrance Brief

For a private label project, these two directions can help you communicate preferences without requesting a copy. For example, you might ask for a fruit-floral concept with restrained sweetness, or a leafy-wood concept with a subtle fruit accent.

Those examples are creative briefs, not claims about a currently available OLFAY formula. Ask for proposed samples, document what you like or dislike and approve the finished application. A familiar fragrance name should not replace this process.

Frequently Asked Questions

Are Baies and Figuier the same scent family?

Both involve fruit references, but their published descriptions point to different combinations. Treat the surrounding floral, green and woody facets as part of the choice.

Can a fig candle from another brand be called a Figuier equivalent?

A shared fig reference alone does not establish an equivalent formula or experience. Compare actual product information and evaluate the candidate on its own merits.

Which should a new fragrance brand use as inspiration?

Start with the customer and the atmosphere you want to create. Use broad descriptive directions to develop your own identity.
